

Farm Work Software Wins Two AE50 Awards

Hamilton, IN – July 3, 2008 – The American Society of Agricultural and Biological Engineers (ASABE) has selected two Farm Works systems as winners of the society's AE50 best and brightest awards for 2008.

ASABE chose the Site Pro Dispatch and the rugged Titan RH handheld device from Farm Works – both introduced in 2007 – as AE50 award winners.

Site Pro Dispatch is retail level software for wireless data exchange. This refreshing new technology is designed to track machinery and equipment for co-ops, agronomy dealers, and custom applicators. It not only tracks a “live” location of every machine, but a few clicks on the desktop computer allow data to be sent from the office to the applicator without picking up the phone. The rugged handheld PC, known as Titan RH, uses the latest software technology for field applications including mapping, soil sampling, field scouting, variable rate, and more. The handheld features a 3.5-inch daylight readable touch screen that is impact resistant to eliminate lost data and down time.

Judges who select AE50 winners represent all facets of the agricultural, food, and biological engineering professions. Winning products are expected to save producers time, cost, and labor, while improving user safety. In addition, ASABE award guidelines state that environmental impact must be a factor, while keeping production and operating costs low.
